World Patient Safety Day 2021 – “Safe maternal and new born care”

Geetha Balsarkar¹

Patient harm unknowingly or knowingly due to adverse uncertain events occurring while in hospital is one of the leading causes of morbidity and mortality worldwide. It is very significant in Obstetric practice. Conditions like wrong drug administered to wrong patient, anaphylactic reactions to certain drugs, post-partum haemorrhage due to certain conditions and delayed decision making are all contributing to patient harm. Patient safety is a new health care discipline that has emerged due to the growing complexity of health care systems with multiple employees involved and the rise of patient harm in health care facilities. World Patient Safety Day was established in 2019 by the Seventy-second World Health Assembly through the adoption of resolution WHA 72.6 – “Global action on patient safety”. The overall objectives of the Day celebrations are to enhance global awareness of patient safety, increase public engagement in health care safety, and promote global action to prevent and reduce avoidable harm in health care. Each year a different theme is selected to shed light on a priority area critical to patient safety and ultimately the achievement of universal health coverage. The theme selected for World Patient Safety Day 2021 is “Safe maternal and new born care”, due to the significant burden of risks and harm women and new borns are exposed to when receiving care during childbirth. The issue has been further compounded multiple times by the COVID-19 pandemic, which has led to the disruption of essential health services due to breaks in supply chains, women's inability to access care, and the shortage of skilled health professionals. This year's campaign slogan – “Act now for safe and respectful childbirth!” – calls on all stakeholders to accelerate the actions necessary for ensuring safe and respectful childbirth. It is envisaged that the momentum generated by World Patient Safety Day 2021 will revamp stakeholders' efforts to achieve universal health coverage for all women and new borns and ultimately achieve the maternal and new born SDG 3 targets. “ACT NOW FOR SAFE AND RESPECTFUL CHILDBIRTH!”

Recent Advances in Diagnosis and Management of Female Genital Tuberculosis

J. B. Sharma¹ · Eshani Sharma¹ · Sangeeta Sharma² · Sona Dharmendra¹

Female genital tuberculosis (FGTB) is an important cause of significant morbidity and infertility.

Gold-standard diagnosis by demonstration of acid fast bacilli on microscopy or culture or detection of epithelioid granuloma on histopathology of endometrial or peritoneal biopsy is positive in only small percentage of cases due to its paucibacillary nature. Use of gene Xpert on endometrial or peritoneal biopsy has improved sensitivity of diagnosis. Composite reference standard (CRS) is a significant landmark in its diagnosis in which combination of factors like AFB on microscopy or culture, positive gene Xpert, epithelioid granuloma on

Knowledge, Attitude and Perception of HIV/Aids Among Antenatal Women and its Correlation with their Socio-Demographic Profile: Study from a Tertiary Care Centre of Northern India

Manisha Upadhyay¹ · Kusum Lata² · Tek Chand Yadav³ · Rajiv Mahendru¹ · Sunita Siwach¹ · Pinky Lakra¹

Purpose of Study To evaluate the knowledge, attitude and perception of HIV/AIDS among antenatal women and to correlate them with their socio-demographic profile.

Methods We conducted this study on 400 pregnant women attending the antenatal clinic of our hospital for the first time irrespective of their period of gestation, age and parity. All the participants were interviewed with the help of a predesigned questionnaire which included their socio-demographic details and questions to assess their knowledge and attitude toward HIV/AIDS. Data were analyzed using SPSS version 22 and expressed in the form of percentage, frequency distribution, mean, standard deviation and p value.

Results Antenatal women of the study population were having unsatisfactory knowledge about HIV/AIDS and prevention of MTCT. 26% women were totally unaware of any entity like HIV. 44% participants did not know the most common way of spread of HIV. Only half of the subjects knew the correct preventive measures for HIV/AIDS. 54% knew about MTCT, but only 24% knew about its transmission through breast milk. Knowledge and attitude was found to be significantly improving with socioeconomic status.

Conclusion Indian antenatal women have poor awareness and wrong perception about HIV/AIDS and its mother to child transmission (MTCT). Targeted educational interventions can be formulated to increase awareness among antenatal women about prevention of vertical transmission of HIV.

Correlation of Insulin Resistance in Pregnancy with Obstetric Outcome

Shazia Bano¹ · Anjoo Agrawal¹ · Mona Asnani¹ · Vinita Das¹ · Renu Singh¹ · Amita Pandey¹ · Namrata Kumar¹ · Wahid Ali¹

Introduction Pregnancy is characterized by a series of metabolic changes that promote insulin resistance. This could be due to increase in the plasma levels of one or more pregnancy-related hormones such as oestrogen, progesterone, prolactin, cortisol, and human placental lactogen (HPL). The increased insulin resistance in pregnancy is associated with development of diabetes which has implications for the future gestations also.

Aims and Objectives To determine status of insulin resistance in pregnant women and correlate the presence of insulin resistance with obstetric outcome.

Material and Method A prospective cohort study was conducted in the Department of Obstetrics and Gynaecology, KGMU, Lucknow, over a period of one year. Total 150 pregnant women were enrolled from OPD, out of which 136 women were followed up till delivery. Insulin resistance was calculated by HOMA IR index, twice in whole antenatal period (first in early pregnancy and second in late pregnancy). All women were also tested for GDM by DIPSI test (plasma glucose value after 2 h of 75 gm glucose load irrespective of last meal) as per protocol.

Results In our study, we found 71 women out of 136 (52.2%) were GDM. Total 30 women out of 136 (22.05%) were GGI (Gestational Glucose Intolerance), and total 39 out of 136 (27.9%) women were found to have insulin resistance using HOMA IR ≥ 2 as cut off. Significant correlation was found in between BMI and insulin resistance ($p = 0.001$) and between GDM and insulin resistance ($p = 0.001$). Relative risk of development of complications like Preeclampsia, neonatal hypoglycemia, and respiratory distress syndrome was higher in women having insulin resistance and GDM.

Conclusion Obstetric complications like preeclampsia, neonatal hypoglycemia, and respiratory distress syndrome are more likely to occur in women with insulin resistance, but larger studies are required to delineate whether insulin resistance alone without development of

FOGSI Position Statement on Violence against Women

- FOGSI recognizes that violence against women is a serious abuse of human rights. Violence against women commences before birth and continues throughout life in various forms.
- These range from infanticide, genital mutilation, child marriage, sexual abuse, domestic violence, sex selected abortions, domestic violence, cyber violence, dowry death, honor killing, acid attack, trafficking, physical abuse in situations of conflict and the neglect of the girl child, adolescent and ageing women.
- Gender discrimination prevents the optimal development and empowerment of girls and women by depriving them of nutrition, education, career opportunities and access to healthcare services making them vulnerable to gender violence.
- Gender violence has severe physical and psychological health consequences. These include but not limited to unwanted pregnancies miscarriages, low birth weight babies, preterm birth sexually transmitted infections, chronic pelvic pain, depression and suicide, sexually transmitted infections and an increased risk of morbidity and mortality.
- FOGSI recommends that obstetricians and gynecologists should be aware of violence against women and its impact on women's health they should acquire the knowledge and skills necessary to identify and provide the first line response and referral to specialized services. FOGSI expects obstetrician and gynecologists to utilize every opportunity to support and empower women, thereby improving their status and health.

Amenorrhea is the absence or abnormal stopping of menstruation.[1] It is termed primary or secondary depending on whether menstruation stopped before or after menarche.

When should the evaluation be started? [2]

- No menstruation by the age of 15 but has well developed secondary sexual characters.
- Breast development has started before age 10 but has not menstruated 5 years after that.
- No evidence of breast development even at 13 years of age.

Incidence:

Abnormalities of development contribute to 60% of causes for primary amenorrhea and 40% are due to endocrine causes. [3]

Work up:

Pregnancy should be ruled out and clinical features should be taken into consideration. Evaluation is needed to check whether there is a functioning hypothalamo-pituitary axis with a normal utero-vaginal anatomy.
